RCRC's first initiative involved the crafting of a policy statement on the religious practice of releasing captive wildlife, which engages society through policy recommendations that are based on sound scientific evidence about the requirements of religion and conservation. The RCRC also identifies societal problems associated with considerable bloodshed and associated with the possible extinction of elephant species. The RCRC is tasked with the goal of empirically investigating the role of religion in the quest for environmental conservation and management, and to promote conservation and development. A problem-oriented study in the Kailash Sacred Landscape, Asia, illustrates that the religious leaders are willing to prompt a change in attitudes and practices that ensure the delivery of religious and conservation. The RCRC, a committee of the RCBWG chaired by Stephen Mufutau Awoyemi, has been translated into Bahasa Indonesian. The full document can be downloaded from ARC's website here.
